We have a responsibility to comply with the philosophy and objectives of our sport, and that the rules, regulations and safety aspects are strictly adhered to.

Our conduct should thus meet a number of requirements, the most important of which are:

- Respect the rights, dignity and worth of others, regardless of gender, national origin, race, colour, sexual orientation, religion, political belief, and economic or other status.
- Consistently display high personal standards and project a favorable image of our sport and administration.
- Always attempt to be objective and judge issues on evidence.
- Recognise the contribution of each individual and be fair, considerate and honest in dealing with others and accept responsibility for your actions.

Lead by example.
